

Kurt Foreman President and CEO

Kurt Foreman was appointed President and CEO of the Delaware Prosperity Partnership (DPP) in the spring of 2018. The Delaware Prosperity Partnership is the first public-private economic development organization created to promote the state of Delaware as a premier business location for companies considering new locations or expansions and to attract entrepreneurs and innovators eager grow in a vibrant and supportive environment.

Foreman's extensive experience includes serving in various senior economic development roles in both chamber-based and independent economic development groups throughout the United States, including Oklahoma, Louisiana, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, and the Washington, D.C. metro area. In addition, he has worked in the local and county settings and with multiple regionally-focused programs.

Foreman has also served as a site selection consultant, working directly with companies to assess and choose locations for moves and/or expansions. He was also an executive recruiter with a leading global executive search firm, supporting senior-level searches across a range of sectors.

He was recently appointed to the Board of STRIDE - the Science, Technology and Research Institute of Delaware - an organization that provides research and development services to companies of all sizes in the chemical value chain.

Foreman received his bachelor's degree at Franklin & Marshall College in Lancaster, PA and his master's degree from Wake Forest University in Winston-Salem, NC. He and his wife, Julie, have four grown children.
